

You Don't Even Know How Aggressive an Investor You Really Are

1. All investments have risk: reinvestment risk, inflation risk, interest rate risk, market risk, default risk
2. Your investment account form may list you as an "aggressive" risk tolerance, so understand what the risk is of each investment
3. Risk of volatility is different from risk of not achieving your goals
4. If you don't need to be aggressive, and if you don't like to be aggressive, don't be aggressive
5. If you shouldn't be aggressive, but you like being aggressive, don't do it -- or only use the money you can actually afford to lose
6. If you need to be aggressive, invest systematically to avoid the risk of letting your emotions take over.
